In the Goya neighborhood, inside a 1966 residential building, this 216 m² first-floor apartment has been completely transformed by the Arctempus studio.

The renovation was designed so that every area has its own dedicated space while remaining seamlessly connected. The property is exterior-facing and features elevator access. Entry is through a welcoming hall with designer wallpaper and a wooden console, leading to a small independent living lounge—an ideal corner for reading, entertaining, or working without occupying the main living room. Beyond lies the main social area, featuring recessed ceilings with indirect lighting, wall moldings, and expansive windows looking out onto the treetop views along the street. The living and dining areas share a unified space with an open-concept kitchen. The kitchen boasts dark wood cabinetry, marble-veined countertops and backsplashes, and a central island with a breakfast bar for everyday dining. The layout of the sleeping quarters is one of the home's strongest assets. Three of the four bedrooms are full suites with en-suite bathrooms and fitted wardrobes or walk-in closets. Two of these suites feature double vanities and backlit mirrors. The fourth bedroom, located near the entrance, works perfectly...
