aProperties presents this iconic and characterful property, designed by the prestigious architects Dr.

Javier de Mesones and Dr. Antonio Miró, both doctors of architecture. The brutalist-style home emulates the structure of a hórreo (granary) in homage to the owner's Cantabrian roots. For this reason, the house is ‘open to the air’, supported by two large pillars, which house different rooms. The house, with a very particular architecture and made with materials of great quality, nobility and timelessness, such as white concrete, Oregon red oak carpentry, has a size of 1,250 m². The large windows bring a lot of natural light into all the rooms, and the large terrace that surrounds the entire house. The main staircase leading to the house can be raised automatically, a feature inspired by the old fortresses that the architect has masterfully integrated into the design of the house. The house has a mirrored layout, with a central entrance giving access to two practically symmetrical wings. The house has three floors plus a basement. On the main floor, through a large entrance hall, the right wing houses a spacious living room-study, a guest toilet and four bedrooms with two shared...
